The Reading Like a Historian curriculum engages students in historical inquiry. Each lesson revolves around a central historical question and features a set of primary documents designed for groups of students with a range of reading skills. This curriculum teaches students how to investigate historical questions by employing reading strategies such as sourcing, contextualizing, corroborating, and close reading. Instead of memorizing historical facts, students evaluate the trustworthiness of multiple perspectives on historical issues and learn to make historical claims backed by documentary evidence. To learn more about how to use Reading Like a Historian lessons, watch these videos about how teachers use these materials in their classrooms. Before we start diving into Critical Thinking Activities for Middle School and High School, I want to take a moment to talk about Black History Month. Sometimes, students (and people) don't understand why a group of people deserves a month, a week, or a day celebrating and recognizing the contributions of that group. Here is a FREE Critical Thinking Activity to help people explore who they are (self-awareness)How they are represented in media texts (social-awareness)and think critically about who is visible and invisible in society (responsible decision-making.) The Who is Invisible slideshow lesson walks students through a series of questions to help them reflect on how different groups of people are portrayed (or not portrayed.) It uses some of the slides from the Thinking about Thinking section of this critical thinking class. By the way, did that sentence about White History Month trigger some emotions or a reaction? It might have. I apologize if it did. I believe we need to have courageous and difficult conversations inside and outside of the classroom if we want to change the world. Here is a citizenship unit that helps students understand that active citizenship means helping to make our communities better. Also, here is a communication unit that explores the communication process, especially when both sides are heated and the issue matters. I've just launched the first lesson in a series I call "Fake News versus" The first one is called "Fake News vs The Five Ws." I published it on March 28, 2022 and it will be free for a limited time. You can get it here. Here's the slideshow lesson. (You can get a copy of the Google Slideshow and the "Taking up the Answers" slideshow here.) Use the Five Ws (who, what, when, where, why/how) to think critically about the story behind the message. 60 minutes of content: Part 1: Fake News vs The Five Ws & Exit Ticket (30 min) Part 2: Taking up the Answers & Student Reflection (30 min) Slideshow lesson teaches critical thinking concepts. Exit ticket assessment gives students a chance to demonstrate their understanding of the lesson. Marking Guide includes sample "look-fors." Simple / straightforward answer Answers demonstrating increasing complexity A list of "Next Steps" is included on the exit ticket. You can choose one for the student, or they can self-select what they think they need to work on. Generic rubric categories are used instead of numbers or marks: Epic, Great, Good, Okay, Needs Improvement, Major Misunderstanding. This way, you can use this activity with different grades – just shift the benchmark where you attach your grades. The "Taking up the Answers" slideshow shows students how to take a simple answer and create a more complex idea using "idea volleyball." Social-Emotional Learning is built directly into the lesson and assessment: The exit ticket is designed to help students develop self-awareness skills. After students see the correct answer, the "Taking up the Answers" slideshow walks students through the goal-setting process to improve: What did you do well?What ideas did you miss this time?What is your goal for next time?What might help you to improve? The "Taking up the Answers" slideshow gives students examples of actions they can take to improve: Optimize results (by looking at previous work to see if there are patterns.) We live in crazy times. People have very strong opinions on both sides of controversial issues: Vaccines and Pandemic restrictionsSystemic racismReligious freedomFreedom of speechGun controlRussia's invasion of Ukraine. Before, we lived in a world where people might not have all of the facts. Now, we live in a world where people are actively putting out propaganda and disinformation. And, this is the world right now – March 2022. Our students will be facing a completely different world when they grow up. But, they will still need to have some basic tools to help them decide what's right and wrong (for them.) This Critical Thinking unit has everything to do with Covid controversies, conspiracy theories, illegal occupations, and war propaganda... without having anything to do with them. The critical thinking worksheets and lessons focus on transferable skills without using examples from current controversies. There's no mention of Ottawa Protest, George Floyd, January 6, or the invasion of Ukraine. That makes this resource timeless. Based on teacher feedback, I've made it a lot easier to find the files you need. Make sure to look at the product preview for each resource. You can see full screenshots of exactly what you get in each critical thinking lesson package. Download the resource Help students improve Social Awareness and Responsible Decision Making by exploring fake news from multiple points of view! Students compare the reliability of information from Social Media and Traditional News Media. Three critical thinking strategies help students make more informed decisions. Students also reflect on how their attitudes change as they learn more information. In this lesson package, students try to be OPEN-MINDED as they explore different points of view and examples. become FULL-MINDED and explore how money is made online through ads before learning about Fake News websites during the Trump election. USE CRITERIA to determine if local news anchors reciting the same script about the dangers of social media is an example of Fake News. Media skills and understandings are embedded throughout the Common Core State Standards rather than treated in a separate section. In this lesson, students will Cite the evidence that supports an analysis of what the text says explicitly and implicitly. Determine and analyze different points of view. Analyze a case where multiple sources provide conflicting information on the same topic (Sinclair incident.) In this 6 lesson package, students explore how their perspective of social media and traditional news media might change as we learn more information about the Sinclair Script incident. (Essentially, a bunch of local news anchors read the exact same script word-for-word about the dangers of social media and fake news.) Section D is hands down one of my favorite lessons because it walks students through different sides of a "fake news" issue. There are 186 slides in the slideshow lesson. You also get 15 pages of handouts. Finally the Critical Thinking Lesson Plan PDFs walk you through 59 pages of detailed scripts and discussion points. Download the resource Help students improve Self-Awareness and Responsible Decision Making skills by using critical thinking to think about critical thinking! Students analyze four videos to explore critical thinking: 12 cognitive biases, online filter bubbles, and unconscious bias. After each video, students brainstorm strategies to 1) trick people and 2) help us think critically. The slideshow lesson reviews three strategies to analyze the videos. Be OPEN-MINDED. Consider alternate points of view. Be FULL-MINDED. Seek out high-quality information. USE CRITERIA to make an informed opinion. Students also watch a fourth video about critical thinking to explore other critical thinking strategies. They then compare strategies to develop a deeper understanding of how to trick people and think more critically. In the Consolidation/Review section, students use a vocabulary-building graphic organizer (Frayer model) to explore critical thinking. Students brainstorm examples, non-examples, features, and must-have criteria. Section E/F is the consolidation chapter of this Critical Thinking Unit. It has 50 slides, 12 pages of handouts. You also get 50 pages of Critical Thinking lesson plans PDF FORMAT. We live in a world filled with news media and social media focus on sensational topics. It's easy to get overwhelmed. We're constantly overloaded with information. Also, it's easy to get caught up and respond emotionally. We all need to be able to think critically when we're drawing conclusions. How many of your students get caught up in these situations: something goes viral on social media, someone spreads a rumour on the school yard, something scary happens in the world, something unfair happened to them. These Critical Thinking Lesson Plans do not contain specific information, examples, or language about the Coronavirus pandemic. And, that's a good thing! It makes this lesson package timeless. So, you can use this lesson today during Covid-19. And, you can use it again when the next obstacle appears. Also, we don't want to give your students outdated information. Nor do we want to trigger anxiety by hyper-focusing on Covid-19. So, this package includes other examples for your students to develop critical thinking strategies. But, as we all know from teaching in the classroom, there's nothing common about common sense. Explicitly teaching strategies help provide a foundation for critical analysis of everything we see, hear and learn. Social-Emotional Learning includes critical thinking – whether we're talking about helping students with responsible decision makingfiguring out how to resolve conflict and develop relationship skillshaving self-management skills to set (and work towards) personal goals being open-minded and embracing social awareness to ensure we have lots of high-quality information instead of relying on stereotypeshaving self-awareness and examining who we are, and how that might introduce prejudices, biases, and filter the way we see the world. Critical Thinking skills help students work to use logic and reason instead of emotion and fear when making decisions or drawing conclusions. This is a lesson students need but don't often realize they need. Critical thinking lesson plans can help teachers empower students to make informed decisions in everyday life independently. We can do this by giving informational texts across subjects as students progress from elementary to middle to high school. Good critical thinking skills are key in academic success as well as to help out when we are drawing conclusions in everyday life. Critical thinking strategies are transferable. Teach students HOW to think critically about search engines, news media or social media by putting the focus on the critical thinking strategies we use. Explicitly focus on different strategies... Then, when we teach subject-based content or explore informational texts in our English language arts classes, we can refer to these critical thinking strategies and draw back on our prior experiences when we analyzed search engines or debunked fake news. This critical thinking activities for middle school work well if you teach in a 7th or 8th grade English Language Arts class. (Also, 6th grade if you teach at a grade 6-8 middle school or junior high school.) Middle school is a great age! Students are old enough to delve into more complex issues, but still young enough to care. (They're like giant marshmallows! Tough on the outside, but still sweet on the inside!) Making the critical thinking process meaningful to students is one way to drive student engagement and participation in class. The search bubble lesson is interesting because students are collecting real-time data and comparing results. This isn't a simple web quest where the answers are in the teaching manual. This is a real-world analysis of search results.The fake news lesson is a great way to teach point of view. The lesson walks middle school students through different perspectives of the Sinclair Script incident where 193 local news anchors said the exact same script about fake news. The invisible lens / thinking about thinking lesson is fun because students get to explore who they are and how that filters the world they see. Plus, your middle school students will be completely shocked that they've missed the bear. (Unless they've seen it before.) There's a lot that older elementary students can get excited about. One of my favourite parts in the critical thinking lesson plan (PDF) is when students analyze the differences between social media and traditional news media. We often think that because citizen journalism in social media can be heavily biased because, well, anyone can post on social media. But, to be fair, we need to use that same critical thinking process regardless of where we get our information! This critical thinking lesson ties in nicely with critical thinking reading strategies. Sometimes students have difficulty using critical thinking strategies when reading. But we evaluate stuff all the time in real life! So, if we start our reading strategy lessons first by showing how we think critically all the time in real life, then we just tell our students that we use the same strategies when reading! Here's a free YouTube video lesson on the evaluating Comprehension Reading strategy. It goes nicely with this critical thinking unit. We spent over 120 hours of research and lesson development on this product so you wouldn't have to. IMPORTANT! You will have to spend a little bit of time going through the slides and handouts to tweak them to fit your specific needs. The teaching slideshow has been split into 6 smaller slideshows for each mini-unit. This would be ideal for teaching critical thinking in English Language Arts as you get more options to divide the content throughout the year. Note, the critical thinking lesson plans (pdf) include screenshots of each slide as well as slide numbers to help you get oriented. It's a big file. In the Critical Thinking Search Engine Bias Informational Text section, you would set up 9 assignments. Each assignment would have a lesson (Google Slides file with the appropriate slides) – you share this VIEW ONLY work handout (Google Doc) – you set the Google Classroom assignment to make every student their own copy of the work handout. YOU MAY WANT TO MODIFY SLIDES FOR YOUR SCHOOL (This warning is also in the critical thinking lesson plans PDF) Everyone has a different school reality: Some of the examples we use in this resource may not be appropriate for all grades, school climates, and classroom realities.Sometimes, as much as we'd love to, we simply don't have time to have our lessons derailed into teachable moments. We tried to come up with different examples from various perspectives, but of course, we are human and have an unconscious bias as well. PLEASE ASK US YOUR QUESTIONS. THIS IS A FANTASTIC HIGH-INTEREST MEGA LESSON ON CRITICAL THINKING IN ENGLISH LANGUAGE ARTS. Here are a few of the slides that we wanted to give you a heads up about. There may be other slides that you may want to modify. We suggest going through the material to make sure everything fits your needs. NOTE: All of our slideshow files and handouts can be modified. Slide 170 looks at various protected grounds in Canada as a way to help students brainstorm different groups of people. The slide discusses race, ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity / expression, marital status, family status, disability, genetic characteristics and convictions for a pardon has been granted or a record suspended. Slide 180 looks at possible answers for different aspects of identity. The slide lists: socio-economic status, nationality, language, colour, age, religion, orientation, gender, race, ability, and culture. Slide 320-323: Wikileaks release of alleged CIA documents showing CIA covert hacking program to listen through SMART TVs and other devices Slide 324-331: Death of Osama bin Laden which was reported on Twitter first. Slide 459: The title of article is "We're journalists at a Sinclair news station. We're pissed." Slide 481: The title of article is "How I made a dumb video making fun of Sinclair Broadcasting and somehow started a media war". NOTE: YOU CAN MODIFY, DELETE, and EDIT ALL of the lessons, handouts, and presentations. You get GOOGLE SLIDE and GOOGLE DOCS formats SO YOU CAN CHANGE THINGS FOR YOUR CLASS.The critical thinking lesson plans pdf is comprehensive and includes suggested talking points for each slide. A search engine is an informational text that we should think critically about. But, not everybody knows how to analyze the Search Engine Results Pages effectively to identify hidden bias. (Heck, most people don't realize the search results we get in everyday life are very personalized and influenced by our search habits.) We need to think more critically before we draw conclusions- not only about the information we read online but also about the information choices we receive from our digital gatekeepers (search engines, media streaming platforms, any other online service that provides a personalized experience based on algorithms.) Informational texts are things that are based on facts. They can include things like biographies, speeches, opinion pieces, and historical or technical accounts. Informational texts can also include information that appears in graphs, charts, and maps. All of these examples are different from fiction and literature which includes things like novels, short stories, drama, and poetry. Here are 9 critical thinking lessons to help you explore search engine results. This is the literacy lesson we should be teaching our students, but it's a text form and topic that not everyone is familiar with. Search Engine results pages are informational texts that we can (and should) analyze: critical thinking strategies and the concept of biasedifferent search engines used around the worldhow search engines workhow to read a Search Engine Results Pageunderstanding form, conventions and techniques when it comes to this informational text. an dictionary experiment to explore whether different dictionaries give the same resultsAn search engine experiment to explore whether different search engines and search conditions (i.e. browser, geographic location, date) give the same results Should different search engines give us different results for the same search phrase?
